‘Follow’ the Ambassadors

The artists behind the “Follow the leader” hit song, Eli Njuchi & Phyzix, are the first Malawian Brand Ambassadors of WWE Snacks. The snacks, owned by Mike Chilewe’s Chilewe Brands Global, own a license from WWE to produce the snacks. In 2019, Mike made the trends in SA when he named SA rapper Kiernan Forbes aka AKA brand manager of the WWE Snacks. Of course, we didn’t see much action from the collaboration between the two, but it looks like the Eli x Phyzix combo will take the WWE snacks to its intended market in Malawi. Recently, Chilewe revealed that the company is opening a factory for the snacks in Malawi soon.

Twitter Malawi's 'not-really-old' Uncle Ngi

Rose to social media fame, perhaps, during the 2020 Fresh Elections' Campaign when Tay Grin asked Twitter users to take a video while killing a cock... an MCP cock. Well, a chicken – symbolizing MCP.

With the promise of 200 grand in mind, Ngi slaughtered it, but never got his money 'till date.

But, who exactly is the man behind the Twitter account: Uncle Ngi? We had an up-close & personal talk with the man, & here's how it went:

Full Name:

Ngighana Mushani

Occupation:

Luanar student, Agri-economics, 4th year.

Why Uncle Ngi?

"I've been an uncle from the jump.

Been taking care of my nephews since I was a kid, so people have always called me an uncle."

Tay Grin or Gerrard Jnr Phiri's online controversy?

"I cannot call them controversies. It's not like I liked it or I wanted it to happen, it just happened. It was fun for people to watch, but I didn't enjoy going against the two on social media. I am not a controversial guy. The Gerrard Phiri [controversy] was interesting cause he's a guy who can take a joke, I think. We have squashed it, he followed me on Twitter actually. The Tay Grin [controversy] was not a trap 'cause everyone was against him. I truly appreciate Twitter Malawi for the support they showed. Although I didn't get paid, ndi ngini yoti zinachitika, zinatha basi."

Fun Fact (s) about you?

"A lot of people think I'm in my 40s, but I am very young. I am actually 22."
